A society free from child marriage and teenage pregnancy
June 2015
THE NATIONAL STRATEGY TO END CHILD MARRIAGE and FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION and early marriage - through the eyes of the girls.
SPEAKING UP AGAINST FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION AND CHILD MARRIAGE

A state child marriage and teenage pregnancy

June 2015
THE NATIONAL STRATEGY TO END CHILD MARRIAGE and FEMALE GENITAL MUTILATION

One event that is extremely vital in this regard is the Day of the African Child. This day is observed in commemoration of the Day of the Innocent Child, June 16, Member States of the African Union and the Partisan of the African Union have declared June 16 as the Day of the African Children. This Day is observed to commemorate the Day of the African Children. This Day is observed to commemorate the Day of the African Children.

The Day of the African Child (DAC) is celebrated annually to commemorate the Day of the Innocent Child. The Day of the African Child is celebrated to recognize the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

UN Joint statement on the Day of African Child

"Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda"

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

• Debunks myths and misconceptions about child marriage and teenage pregnancy
• Exposes the risks and consequences of child marriage and teenage pregnancy
• Promotes the rights of children and young girls

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.

A Call to Action

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

The United Nations in Uganda today joins the Government of Uganda to commemorate the Day of the African Child. The Day of the African Child is observed on June 16 by Member States of the African Union and the United Nations. The Day of the African Child is observed to celebrate the contributions of children to their communities and to highlight the importance of protecting their rights.

The theme for this year’s commemoration is, “Time to take action to end Child Marriage in Uganda”.

Children and young girls are at risk of child marriage and teenage pregnancy. It is important to remember that child marriage and teenage pregnancy can have serious consequences for their health and well-being.